

Ethel Lilian Voynich's Will

(From Voynichiana: documents, images, and research illuminating the lives of Wilfrid and Ethel Voynich and of Anne M.
Nill, Wilfrid Voynich's assistant and Ethel's life-long companion after Voynich's death.)

Ethel Lilian Voynich's Will

The following documents are a copy of Ethel Voynich's will (pp. 2-5) and its notice of probate (p. 6). (A transcription of the main text of the will is appended, pp. 7-8.) The documents were released on September 6, 2011 by the Library of Congress under the Library's equivalent of the Freedom of Information Act. The two documents are part of a file at the Library pertaining to Anne Nill's bequest to that institution of Ethel's music and other memorabilia (see Anne Nill's Will and Her Bequest to the Library of Congress Of Ethel Voynich's Unpublished Music). Ethel's will was probably sent to the Library to confirm that Anne owned the rights to her music, published and unpublished, and could leave it to that institution. Where the original of Ethel's will is, or if it still exists, is unknown. The will is dated December 24, 1943. The notice of probate was filed December 8, 1960 (Ethel died July 27 of that year).

Ethel named Anne Nill executor of her will or, if for some reason Anne could not serve, Hans Thacher Clarke. Clarke, a native of Harrow, England, was a well-known chemist and amateur musician. In 1928 he moved from Rochester, New York, where he had been working for the Eastman Kodak Company since 1914, to New York City to work at Columbia University's 168th Street medical complex. It is not known how Ethel and Clarke happened to become acquainted, but Clarke's musical interests may have brought them together.

Witnesses to the will were Alys Sutcliffe and Elizabeth Preble, who lived together at 138 E 36th Street in Manhattan. Sutcliffe, born around 1895, achieved some reknown as a botanist (she has a variety of heather named after her) and ultimately became Horticulturalist of the Brooklyn Botanical Garden. Late in life she wrote a popular gardening book, House Plants for City Dwellers (1964). She died in 1969. Ethel may have consulted Sutcliffe on the plant illustrations in the Voynich Manuscript and so struck up a friendship. Elizabeth Preble remains obscure.

The copies of both documents, will and notice of probate, are poor. They were probably made shortly after Anne's death in September, 1961. It is not known who penned in the scholia in the margins of Ethel's will.

Voynich,
Ethel
